

Fact Sheet: Flood Risk Increases After Fires Are Out - Buy Flood Insurance Now

Oregon wildfires that are leaving millions of square miles covered in ash are nearing their end, but they're leaving another threat behind them – floods.

Oregonians who live in and around areas impacted by wildfires face an increased risk of flooding for up to several years after a wildfire. So it's important to consider purchasing flood insurance now. It takes 30 days after applying for a new National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) insurance policy to go into effect.

Flooding, Mudflows and Erosion Risk Following Wildfires

- Intense wildfires dramatically alter the terrain when they burn away vegetation and scorch the earth
- Charred land and burned vegetation forms a water-repellant layer that cannot absorb rain, so rainwater bounces off
- Areas that lie below or downstream of the burn scars face an increased threat of flooding
- Intense rainfall can flood a low-lying area in less than six hours.
- Flash floods can dislodge boulders, uproot trees and destroy buildings and bridges.
- Rivers of flowing mud are caused by brush loss plus heavy rains. Rapid snowmelt can also trigger mudflows
- Burned land poses a threat of flooding until vegetation grows back, a process that can take five years

Knowing You Can Recover Brings Peace of Mind

No home is completely safe from potential flooding. When just one inch of water in a home can cost more than $25,000 in damage, flood insurance can be the difference between recovery and financial devastation.

To be eligible to purchase a flood insurance policy, a property owner's town or county must participate in the NFIP and adopt certain ordinances. Consult your local official to see if your jurisdiction participates.
